

(young minds) future leaders

The senior secondary years of middle adolescence is a crucial bridge to college and young adulthood. It is a period during which they make choices that impact their careers and prepares them for living in a larger community - they have to narrow down to their area of interest academically, deal with parental pressures about their choices, handle the higher academic demands of the boards and competitive exams, grapple with the developmental need to fit in with peers and balance the conflicts arising from a developing sense of self and increasing independence.

As a school Samhita aims to prepare students academically to face the boards and college entrances. Preparation for the boards requires basic concept level understanding and tutoring in test taking skills. Tackling the competitive exams requires maximum exposure to different application of concepts and sustained practice of application and exposure to formats of testing used therein.

Academic accomplishments apart, we need to work with students at this stage to support developmental and future needs, equipping them to cope with the challenges they encounter and preparing them for the world beyond the school.

In short it is designed as a preparatory journey towards College, Careers, Community & Citizenship – University of Life

We have amalgamated a Finishing school concept which addresses these lifeskills in an inside-out approach. Deriving from a belief that it is success in self mastery that must precede any attempt to lead or influence others, we start with 'the leader in me'. Personal development like understanding oneself, taking responsibility for ones actions, setting goals, personal integrity choices, empathy are some of the foundations that lead to interpersonal effectiveness and leadership of others and in community. Moving then 'outwardly' in the inside-out approach the Finishing school addresses the communication and soft skills aspect of the student as a person.

Thus we end the student's journey through Samhita staying true to our vision of creating future leaders through a creative education in a caring environment.
